01 - My story

My name is Helena Zaruba, I am a fourth-year student at the Faculty of Fine Arts of the University of Porto. Several of my video projects focus on the consequences of war and its impact on everyday life. In photography, I am particularly interested in subjects connected to my own life and environment. On one of my photographic series documents the people I worked with while employed in a restaurant, focusing on everyday relationships, work routines, and human connections.

02 - Method

My artistic practice is primarily focused on photography and video. I am interested in documenting real experiences, personal stories, and contemporary social issues that shape people's lives.

Project 1

Concept & Research

Concept

This documentary explores the lasting impact of war through the personal stories of my friends and people close to me. Rather than presenting statistics or political analysis, the film gives space to individual voices, allowing each participant to reflect on how their life has changed.

Research

The research for this documentary project began with a personal question: how has the war changed the lives of the people closest to me? Rather than focusing on political events, I wanted to document individual experiences and the emotional impact of living through war.

Concept

"Agora percebe?" explores the psychological relationship between watching and being watched. The project examines how the camera can influence our perception of reality and how easily roles can be reversed.

Research

This project was developed through an exploration of perception, observation, and the relationship between the person behind the camera and the person being filmed.
